LILITH Magazine: The Voice of Jewish Women, an exhibition celebrating more than 25 years of the award-winning independent Jewish women's magazine, will be on view at the Hebrew Union College-Jewish Institute of Religion Museum from November 3 to November 30, 2005. The exhibition, which documents the impact of feminist Jewish journalism during the pivotal years 1976 to 2001, includes fine art illustrations for the magazine, original manuscripts, iconic photographs, and memorabilia supporting Jewish women's roles in the world. It addresses diverse topics such as women rabbis and cantors, women and Jewish ritual, Jewish community, public celebrations, scholarship, health and healing, images of Jewish women, "unheard" women of the Diaspora, intimate relationships, and body image.

LILITH Magazine is the activist public voice for a changing community of Jewish women. With compassion and forthright reporting, LILITH tackles controversial issues that are frequently ignored or discredited. With a circulation of 10,000, LILITH Magazine presents investigative reports on breaking news such as "J.A.P." baiting on college campuses, clergy abuse, body image and eating disorders, and breast cancer; news briefs; memoirs; first-person stories; reviews of books, film, and music; fiction, poetry, art, and photography.
